2003 AFM 750 Production class champion
2002 AFM #7 plate holder
2000, 2001 AFM 250 Production class champion
1999 – present AFM Race School instructor

I ride a Suzuki GSX-R750 motorcycle in the American Federation of Motorcyclists's 750 Production, 750 Superbike, and Formula Pacific classes. I am the 750 Production season champion for the year 2003, and I look forward to defending my championship in 2004.

I began racing in 1996, and my past results include winning the 250 Production class championship in 2000 and 2001, as well as earning the AFM #7 plate for 2002. My riding skills, my thoughtful approach, and my communication skills have earned me positions as an instructor with several motorcycle track event organizers.

Other riders can offer representation based on a reputation for honesty, candor, and a genial personality. I offer that and more: As a multi-time class champion, I am prepared to offer sponsors representation based on results, too.

Objectives for 2004:

My primary goal for 2004 is to move my riding skills to the next level. I intend to compete at every 2004 AFM event, and to attend several track days, both to improve my own skills and to instruct other riders.

In 2004 I would like to:

> Improve my lap times by about three seconds per lap at all the AFM tracks by the end of the season;
>
> Finish consistently on the podium of 750 Superbike during the latter part of the season;
> Finish consistently within the top ten in Formula Pacific during the latter part of the season; and
>
> Defend my 750 Production class championship, provided it does not detract from my focus on my other goals.

Background and approach:

My racing focus is primarily on the development of my own riding and racing skills. I concentrate on improving my racing ability and keeping my equipment reliable.

Another vital component of my racing is the personal relationships I build with other racers, race officials and workers, and sponsors. As an AFM Race School instructor since 1999, I meet new racers when they begin their AFM racing careers, and lasting friendships often result. I also know the club's more experienced racers well.

My connection to people at every level of experience puts me in an excellent position to provide low-key, trustworthy, enthusiastic representation for my sponsors' quality products and services.
